

Discounting the Positives

Name: _____

Date: _____

Instructions

We often assume that our life is messed up, or a certain aspect of our life is devoid of all positivity. We fail to see anything good or positive in our life. But in reality, that is rarely the case.

This worksheet will help you put things into perspective. All you have to do is Now, while being as objective, unbiased, and honest as possible (very important), list down all the good and positive things about, your life in general, or anything for that matter. And on the left side, all the bad. As many as you can recall, and try to be as unbiased as possible.

First, specify what is the table is about for you (e.g. “my life in general”, “my relationship”, etc.):

Now, continue with the list as instructed:

Good Things / Positive Things	Bad Things / Negative Things

